Understanding Trail Signs & Loop Arrows

The red and yellow loop arrows can be used to connect individual trails to form longer loops. If you follow the yellow arrows only, you will ride a 22 mile continuous loop that is made up of green (easy) and blue (moderate difficulty) trails. If you want to include additional blue and some black (most difficult) trails, then look for trail posts that have both a red and a yellow arrow. For a more challenging ride, follow the optional red arrows until you reach another yellow. At that point you are back on the yellow loop. Following the yellow loop and doing all the red options will result in a 33 mile ride.
